Often implies hostility : against : invadere, incurere, invidere, imprecari. f. Of causation : bringing into a state, developing towards (cf. ## L

L, l, indecl. n. or (sc. littera), f. the eleventh letter of the Latin alphabet. I. Latin l represents. a. Orig. l ; also not infrequently r. b. Orig. d in some words becomes l in Latin ; thus lingua was orig. dingua (cf. Eng. tongue) ; and lacrima was dacrima (cf. Gk. δακρυ). This happened gen. when the d was initial ; but is found also when it stood between two vowels : thus Gk. δδ-ωδ-α ; Lat. odor, but also olere. c. In many adjectives the termination is -aris or -alis, acc. as l is found, or r, in the preceding syllable ; thus vulgaris, popularis, but mortalis, lateralis. d. In the composition and derivation of nouns and adjectives, l exercises an assimilating power over other consonants brought into contact or proximity with it : libellus from liber ; ulius from unus ; labellum from labrum.

II. Changes of l in the Romance languages. a. In Ital. into i : e.g. Lat. plus, flos, glacies ; It. più, fiore, ghiaccio. b. In French into r : e.g. Lat. apostolus, capitulum, epistula ; Fr. apôtre, chapitre, épître. Also in derivatives of Lat. lusciniolus ; It. rossignolo ; Sp. ruiseñor ; Fr. rossignol. c. In a few words into n : e.g. Lat. libella, Fr. niveau. d. In a single case, into d : e.g. Lat. amyllum ; It. amido ; Fr. amidon. e. Into ll, or gl, ch, or lh : e.g. Lat. pilare, Fr.

pillor, It. pigiare. f. ll undergoes the same changes as those of the single consonant explained in e; in French, however, ll is seldom changed. g. When ll of the Latin word terminates the derived word, one l is, in French, usually omitted: e.g. Lat. caballus, Fr. cheval; Lat. vallis, capillus, auccella, collum; old Fr. val, chevel, oisel, col; mod. Fr. cheveu, oiseau, cou. h. The change of l into u, seen in the examples last given, often occurs in other combinations: e.g. Lat. talpa, albus, delphinus, altius, alter, dulcis: Fr. taupe, arabe, dauphin, haut, autre, doux. III. As an abbreviation L. a. us denotes the praenomen Lucius, though it also stands for libens and locus. b. As a numeral L stands for 50.

M

M, m, the twelfth letter of the Latin alphabet.

I. The Latin language, unlike the Greek, tolerated a final m; but its sound was faint, and before an initial vowel, even in prose, was scarcely heard. Hence arose the rule of versification respecting the elision of final syllables terminating in m. To this also are owing the forms donec for donicum, veneo for venum eo, etc. The Latin termination m generally corresponds to the Greek final ν, in the inflexions both of nouns and verbs. II. m and n are interchanged in many instances in Latin for the sake of euphony: e.g. eundem for eumdem; quor-undam for quorundam; imbellis for inbellis; imprimis for in primis; immanis for inmanis, etc. m is substituted for p or b before a nasal suffix; cf. sop-or, som-nus; scam-num, scabellum. It is used to nasalise roots ending in p or b, as in rumpo (rup), cumbo (cub). III. The only change of m in the Romance languages is into n in a few words: e.g. Lat. mespilum, It. nespolo, Sp. nespera, Fr. néfle. So with the omission of a vowel: e.g. Lat. semita, Sp. senda, Fr. sentier; Lat. comitem, It. conte, Sp. conde. So when followed by n: e.g. Lat. columna; It. colonna; Fr. colonne. N.B. omission of m before n: e.g. Lat. domina, somnus; Sp. doña, sueno; Port. dona, sono. IV. As an abbreviation. a. M. us. denotes the praenomen Marcus, and less freq. magister, monumentum, municipium; M' denotes the praenomen Manius. b. As a numeral M, or CIO, denotes the number 1000.

O

O, o, the fourteenth letter of the Latin alphabet. I. Relations of o with the other vowels. a. For those with a, e, and i, see those letters. b. With u. These two vowels are the most nearly allied, and their interchanges are very numerous. The oldest monuments of the Latin tongue frequently exhibit o where the classic language has u. So on the Column. rostr., exfocient, consol, primos (Nom. sing.), captom. And, on the contrary, u in the old forms, fruns, futes, for the later frons, fontes. o and u both appear in connexion with consonantal u: e.g. avos and avus, servos and servus, though in these combinations o was preferred. c. ō is substituted for au (in popular pronunciation) in Clōdīus, plōdo, plēstrum, sōdes, etc. II. Changes of o in the Romance languages: ō in Italian sometimes becomes u, uo; e.g. Lat. totus, It. tutto; in French it is most commonly changed to ou, eu, and oeu: e.g. Lat. totus, Fr. tout; Lat. hora, Fr. heure; Lat. nodus, Fr. noeud. Before m and n it sometimes remains unchanged, as Lat. non, Fr. non; Lat. pomum, Fr. pomme. ō is generally changed, in It. into uo; e.g. Lat. bonus, It. buono; in Fr. into eu (oeu): Lat. populus, Fr. peuple; Lat. cor, Fr. coeur. ## Q

Q, q, the sixteenth letter of the Latin alphabet.

I. There was a manifest tendency in Latin to get rid of q. Thus in the oldest inscriptions the forms pequdes, pegunia, occur instead of pecudes, pecunia. So the original forms quovius, quoi, quor (quāre), became cuius, cui, cur. II. Relations of q with other letters. 1. In Latin itself the only change is into c, of which examples are given above: in the composition and inflexion of words this change frequently occurs: e.g. quatio, percutio; sequor, secutus. During the Republican period, qu does not occur before u; either quom or cum is written, equos or ecus, etc. 2. qu in Latin sometimes corresponds to π in Greek: e.g. sequor, ἐπομαι: also to τ; e.g. que, quathor; re, τέρραpes. III. Changes of q (or rather of qu) in the Romance languages. 1. Into c: e.g. Lat. quomodo; It. come; Fr. comme. 2. Into g (only in the middle of words): e.g. Lat. aequalis; It. eguale; Fr. égal. 3. In Fr. q is sometimes omitted: e.g. Lat. aqua, coquere, sequi; Fr. eau, cuire, suivre. IV. As an abbreviation, Q represents most freq. the praenomen Quintus, but also stands for quæstor, que, quinquennalis; S. ## R

R, r, the seventeenth letter of the Latin alphabet. I. It corresponds in general to Indo-European r (which however is sometimes represented in Latin by l), and to Greek ρ. II. 1. In many Latin words an original s, standing between two vowels, has been changed to r; e.g. asa, lases, meliosum, have become ara, lares, meliorum. So also dirimo is formed from dis-emo. In neuter nouns of the type of genus, the oblique cases, generis, etc., were originally genes-is, etc. This change, however, is not uniformly found; s in many words has remained unaltered between vowels; quaeso maintains itself beside quero, and nasus beside navis. A similar change to that above mentioned sometimes takes place in final s; arbores, colores, labores, have become arbor, color, labor. 2. In meridies, r has been substituted for d through the influence of dissimilation. 3. r is elided for euphony in crebesco for crebresco, etc. III. Changes of r in the Romance languages. 1. Into l: this is the most frequent change: e.g. Lat. arbor, It. albero; Lat. frangere, peregrinus; Fr. flairer, pêlerin. 2. Into d: Lat. quaerere, rarus; It. chiedere, rado. 3. rs into ss: Lat. dorsum; It. dosso. 4. r often changes its place: Lat. verve, temperare, Fr. brebis, tremper. 5. When, by the disappearance of a vowel of a Latin word, the combination mr is formed, in French it is changed to mbr; Lat. num(e)-rus, cam(e)ra; Fr. nombre, chambre; also in Sp. hombro from Lat. hum(e)rus. So nr in French becomes ndr; Lat. gen(e)r, pon(e)re; Fr. gendre, pondre; and lr becomes ldre, further changing to udre by vocalisation of l; Lat. mol(e)re, sol(ve)re, Fr. moudre, soudre. IV. As an abbreviation, R. signifies Romanus, also Rufus, recte, reficiendum, regnum, ripa, etc.; R. P. res publica; R. R. rationes relatae.

S

S, s, indecl. n. or (agreeing with littera), f. I. a. Latin s in the middle of words corresponds to Greek σ Initial s has as its regular representative in Greek the rough breathing; thus we have sal=ἄλς; sedeo=ἔδωμαι; semi=ἡμι-; septem=ἑπτά; sequor=ἑπομαι; serpo=ἔρπω. b. In the earlier periods of the Latin language, before z came back into use, z in words borrowed from the Greek was represented by ss; thus μάζα became massa, Ἀττικίζω atticiisso, καπάζω comissor. Original initial s before a consonant has been lost in many Latin words: as fallo, pituita, tego, etc. II. s had, as in English, two different sounds, a sharp and a flat (or weak). It had the sharp sound at the beginning of words, as also in the middle of words before and after other consonants. But between vowels it had the weaker sound, which was like that of English z, or of s in Fr. and Eng. rose. Hence in this position it was often changed to r (see article on letter R). Final s had the weak sound. Its weakness led to its frequent disappearance, as in such nominatives as nauta (ναῦτης), poeta, and in ille, iste, etc. Its loss took place especially in the popular Latin of the oldest, and again of the most recent, period. Hence in the ante-classical poets down to the time of Cicero, final s was often dropped before words beginning with a consonant, as Fulvius' Nobilior, vivo' per, gravi' terra, Hyperion' cursum. Hence also arose the secondary forms of the second person sing. of pass. and dep. verbs, as patere for pateris, amabere for amaberis, etc. Hence, too, such forms as ain', satin', scin', viden' for aisne, satisne, aisne, videsne; also perh. mage for magis and the like. III. Changes of s within the Latin language. 1. As we have seen, between vowels it very commonly becomes r. 2. It is assimilated before f in the compounds of dis: e.g. differo, difficilis, diffluo. 3. With the gutturals it combines to form x; e.g. rex=reg-s, pax=pac-s; so the perfects rexi, duxi, vexi, from rego, duco, reho. IV. In the Romance languages initial s commonly remains unchanged; sometimes in Ital. it becomes z; e.g. Lat. sapphirus, socculus: It. zaffiro, zoccolo. When followed by p, c, or t, it frequently has a prefixed e, and in French is often omitted; e.g. Lat. species, spiritus, Fr. espèce, esprit (Sp. espíritu); Lat. scribere, scala, stabulum; Fr. écrire (Sp. escribir), échelle, étale. Medial s is often lost before a consonant in French, the omission (which did not take place in old Fr.) being indicated by a circumflex over the preceding vowel; e.g. Lat. asinus, bestia, pascere, crecere; Fr. âne, bête, paître, croître, etc. Sometimes medial s becomes sc (It.) or ss (Fr.); e.g. Lat. vesica, It. vescica, Fr. vessie; Lat. designare, Fr. dessiner; very rarely it is changed to r, as in orstra from Lat. ossifraga, Marseille from Massilia. When medial s becomes final in French, it is sometimes changed to z, as in nez from nasus, chez from casa; or to x as in roux from russus, toux from tussis; the suffix -osus regularly becomes -eux. V. As an abbreviation, S denotes sacrum, semia, sibi, suis, etc. S. AS. D., sub asciâ dedicavit. S. C., senatus consultum, S. P., suâ pecuniâ. S. P. Q. R., Senatus Populusque Romanus.

T

T, t, indecl. n. or (sc. littera) f. I. Latin t corresponds to Skr. t (and sometimes th) and to Gk. τ. In accordance with Grimm's law, in Gothic (and low-German generally, including English) th regularly answers to it, and in O.H.G. (with which modern German commonly agrees) d. Lat. tres; Gk. τρεῖς; (Eng. three); O.H.G. dri (Germ. drei). II. In the Romance languages t initial u remains unchanged. In the middle of words it sometimes becomes d; thus Lat. litus, It. lido; Lat. lutum, Sp. lodo; Lat. adiutare, Fr. aider. This change also often happens when t has become final by omission of a suffix, as in Fr. plaid from Lat. placitum. Aigu, vertu, etc., were aigud, vertud in an earlier stage of the French language. In Spanish the change of Lat. t to d is particularly frequent; thus it is regularly seen in past participles, as hablado from Lat. fabulatum. The termination -aticus, which is frequent in low Lat., regularly becomes -aggio in It. and -age in Sp. and Fr.; thus Lat. silvaticus, It. selvaggio, Fr. sauvage; Lat. viaticum, It. viaggio, Sp. viage, Fr. voyage. When te or ti in Latin is followed by a vowel the e or i in the derived French word commonly disappears, and the t becomes c, ç, s or ss; thus Lat. platea, Fr. place; Lat. adnuntiare, Fr. annoncer; Lat. redemptio, Fr. rançon; Lat. ratio, Fr. raison; Lat. nutritio, Fr. nourrisson. In Italian, the Lat. ti followed by a vowel becomes gi; thus Lat. ratio, statio; It. ragione, stagione; or, more commonly, zi, as in navigazione from Lat. navigatio. In Sp. the same Lat. combination becomes z, as in razon from Lat. ratio; or ci, as in Sp. nacion from Lat. natio, oracion from Lat. oratio. Lat. tr in the middle of a word in Italian and Spanish remains unchanged or becomes dr; in French, rr or r; thus Lat. latro, It. ladrone, Sp. ladron, Fr. larron; Lat. vitrum, It. vetro, Sp. vidrio, Fr. verre; Lat. petra, It. pietra, Sp. piedra, Fr. pierre; Lat. pater (patrem), It. Sp. padre, Fr. père. Lat. st in the middle of a word sometimes becomes in It. sc, in Fr. ss; as in Lat. angustia, It. angoscia, Fr. angoisse; Lat. ostiarium, It. usciera, Fr. huissier. III. As an abbreviation, T stands for Titus, Ti for Tiberius; Tr. tribunus; T. F. testamenti formula; T. F. C. titulum faciendum curavit; T. P. tribunicia potestas.

U

U, u (orig. V, which character arose from the Greek Y). I. It did not correspond phonetically to Greek v, which, at least in the mature period of the Greek language, was pronounced like French u or German ü; ou is more commonly put for it by the Greeks in transliterating Roman names or other Latin words. (In this volume, the letter v is used to represent consonantal u.) II. Etymologically it answers to I.-E. u, and therefore to Gk. v; thus Lat. us, Gk. (ο)ύς; though it has often arisen from a modification of another vowel, as in ureus, cf. ἄρκτος; ulcus, cf. ἔλκος; humus, cf. χαμαί. The diphthong oe (orig. oi) is closely akin to u; cf. munio, moenia; punio, poena. III. Unaccented u almost always becomes in French either o or ou; thus Lat. voluntatem, Fr. volonté; Lat. gubernare, nutrire, sufflare; Fr. gouverner, nourrir, souffler. Accented u, if long by nature, remains unchanged; thus Lat. nudus, murus, luna, Fr. nu, mur, lune; if in long syllable, it remains unchanged, as in pulpe from pulpa, or becomes o, as in monde, onde, from mundus, unda, or ou, as in bouche, sourd, from bucca, surdus; if short, it almost always becomes ou, as in joug, loup, où, from iugum, lupus, ubi; in a few words, however, it changes to eu, as in fleuve, jeune, gueule, from fluvius, iuvenis, gula. In Italian, long u is generally unchanged, as in duro, luna, from durus, luna; but short u often changes to o, as in gola, omero, goccia, from gula, umerus, gutta. IV. As an abbreviation, V (for U) stands for uti; so V.V., uti voverant.

V

V, v, is in this volume used to represent consonantal u. I. Latin (consonantal) u

corresponds to Greek digamma. It occurs in many Latin words, whose Greek cognates contain no corresponding sound; but those cognates originally had a F, which in the course of time was lost: cf. ver (= veser), ε(ο)ap, ἦρ; vestis, ἑσθῆς; vicus, ὄλκος; vinum, ὄλκος; viola, ῖον; veho, ὄχος; ovis, ὄvis; silva, ῦλη (= συλφα), etc. II. In the Romance languages, Lat. consonantal u normally becomes v. In a few instances it becomes b, as in It. berbice, Fr. brebis, from Lat. vervex; Fr. berger, from Low Lat. vervicarius; courbe, from Lat. curvus; this change had probably shown itself in popular Latin at an early period. In a certain number of Italian and French words v has, through a Germanic corruption of the consonant, been changed to gu or g; thus Lat. vespa, Fr. guêpe; Lat. viscum, Fr. gui; Lat. vadium, It. guado, Fr. gué; Lat. vastare, It. guastare, Fr. gâter. Medial (consonantal) u is frequently omitted in the Romance languages, as in It. rio, from rivus; Fr. paon, peur, from pavo, pavor. As a final, in French it becomes f; thus cerf, bref, neuf, boeuf, from cervus, brevis, novus, bovem. III. As an abbreviation V stands for vir, vivus, vixit, voto, vale, verba, etc.; V.C., vir clarissimus; V.C.P., voti compos posuit; V.V., virgo Vestalis. IV. As a numeral, V stands for five, being in this case perhaps half of the X or cross, which was the symbol of ten.

X

X, x, is found in the oldest Latin inscriptions known to us. I. It is a double consonant, like the Greek ξ, being substituted for cs; e.g. pax=pac-s, dixi=dic-si. As the other gutturals, g, q, and h, become c before s, x takes the place of the combinations gs, qs, and hs; e.g. rex=reg-s, coxi=coq-si, traxi=trah-si. The sibilant element of x was very strongly pronounced; hence s sometimes remains alone before c and t, as in sescenti, Sestius. II. In Italian, x becomes s, ss, or sci, as in esempio, testo, tessere, lasciare from exemplum, textus, texere, lazare. In French it commonly changes to ss, as in aisselle, laisser from axilla, laxare; or, less frequently, s, as in buis from buxus, frêne (through fresne) from fraxinus, setier (through sestier) from sestarius. III. As an abbreviation, X stands for denarius and also for the number ten.

* As the sextārius differs from the English pint by only 1·25th part of the latter, it will be found useful in ordinary rough calculations to take it at exactly a pint and so with the other measures in this Table. The results thus obtained may be corrected by subtracting from each of them its 1·25th part.

† According to the uncial division, the sextārius was the as or unit, and the cyathus the uncia or twelfth part.
